THE FINANCIAL EXPERIMENT

The experimental money system was put in place in 1971 changing a system that existed from the Napoleonic wars until the start of the world wars. The world's money system was backed by gold. Real money disappeared nearly 40 years ago and was replaced by paper money, this allowed the supply of money to grow much faster than the supply of goods and services. The US money supply (M2) rose 1314% between 1970 and 2008. The US public and private debt now amounts to nearly four times its GDP, in the midst of the great depression the total debt topped out at three times GDP. This financial crisis will be more severe in magnitude and length. America is the largest debtor nation in the history of the world and eventually resource rich nations will lead the financial markets. China central bank has already challenged the US to step aside to allow a new global currency to replace the dollar. Western governments will try to inflate their problems but after deflation will come crippling inflation because we are in the terminal stages of the world's most gigantic pyramid scheme and the recent spate of frantic spending and money creation will soon trigger a currency destroying inflation known as hyper-inflation. The price of gold is urging the central banks to start raising interest rates but they can't due to the simple fact that no one can afford to pay high interest on their loans.

The total commercial lending at UK banks down by almost 25% in the past year and half. Interbank lending rates in Europe has risen. Poor or negative EU growth won't help Britain's private sector compensate for our own fiscal squeeze.

At the end of a credit bubble recessions follows recessions with surprising rapidity.

In a deflationary world debt burdens are increased.

After deflation will come hyper-inflation. As the deflationary cycle increases the political government will go overboard on hyper-inflation the printing presses will go into hyper-drive.

cases, have secured various borrowings against their Picassos and Hirsts. This means that, in troubled times, they have a very strong incentive to keep art prices both high and rising – something they do by overbidding for other art works at auction.

Say you have five works of art by the same artist valued at £2m each, and borrowings against them of something like £8m, and you need more money to bail out a failure elsewhere. The best way to get it might be to bid up another similar painting by the same artist to £3m – in a stroke making your existing collection suddenly "worth" not £10m but £15m, and allowing you to borrow the extra £5m.

Three Stripes Communications says Now is the time to invest in Gold

Subprime Crash

BullionVault's Director, Paul Tustain, founded BullionVault as a response to a widespread perception of increasing systemic risk in the financial world. He remains in full day-to-day control, and in his view global systemic risk has become still more acute. He is committed to directing the business in the way which at every step retains its first objective of using gold to secure customers against the threats in the international financial system.

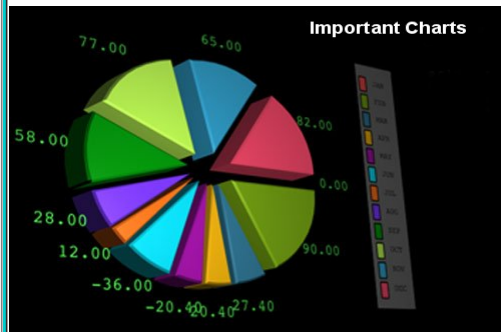

For those of you who are in a position to lend then Three Stripes

Communications says take a look at Zopa

Zopa is a marketplace where people lend and borrow money to and from each other, sidestepping the banks.

It's a smarter, fairer and altogether more human way of managing your money, where both borrowers and lenders get better rates. Find out more
